CAMP FUND IS GIVEN BOOST BY CANVASS HERE

Solicitor Finds Interest In Project Growing In Solicitation Of Town This Morning.

Starting a canvass of the business men of Gettysburg in the interests of securing subscriptions to the fund to purchase the tract of land in Menallen township, near Brysonia, for the establishment of the Leadership Training camp for the United Lutheran church, S. F. Lehman reported a total of $500 collected during the morning hours. The goal for Gettysburg has been set at $1000.

The camp which will be erected on the tract of land, provided the deeds to the properties included in the tract is turned over to the parish and school committee of the United Lutheran church, of which Dr. M. Hadwin Fischer, member of the faculty at the theological seminary here, is chairman, will bring approximately 1,000 students to the county during the summer months. Since the proposal to have the camp here was announced a number of prominent men not only in the vicinity of Gettysburg, but in Gettysburg also, have been actively engaged in raising subscriptions for the purchase of the land.

With more than $2000 raised on Monday, the sum has been pushed forward with the donation of sixteen acres of land by Charles Taylor, which are valued at nearly $500. Six acres already had been donated by A. D. Knouse, M. E. Knouse and F. R. Culp for the tract and with the campaign progressing so well in Gettysburg it is expected that the quota of slightly more than $1,000 which has been set for the Arendtsville committee to raise will be reached within a short time.

A subscription list to which the names of the donors has been signed

EXPECT IRISH PILOT OF PLANE AT MURRAY BAY

Fitzmaurice Forced To Stop At Clarke City On Account Of Storm; Tell Of Flight.

Murray Bay, Que., April 18.—(AP)—Perfect flying weather prevailed here today in contrast to the past few days and led many who await the coming of Maj. James Fitzmaurice, of the crew of the trans-Atlantic Bremen, to expect his arrival from Clark City with C. A. Schiller.

The journey by airplane from Greenly Island where the German companions of the major remain had been broken twice by storms. The two spent last night at Clarke City.

Miss Herta Junkers, daughter of the head of the firm which built the Bremen, was up early in expectation of consultation with Major Fitzmaurice on the future program of the fliers.

Although the sun was shining here it was not known what conditions were at Clarke City. It was believed however that there were no conditions which would prevent flight over the last few hundred miles of the journey from Greenly Island.

(By The Associated Press)

The Junkers monoplane Bremen flew blindly through the skies without lights or any means of holding to the course for hours before it landed on Greenly Island, first detailed reports of the flight received through the Canadian press revealed.

The situation was so serious toward the end, a Grenfell Mission nurse who went to the island by dog sled told the Times Globe and Telegraph Journal of St. John, N. B., that Baron von Huenefeld, sponsor of the flight, decided to shoot his companions and himself if the worst came. Cable dispatches the day before the Bremen left Ireland told of the Baron arming himself for emergency before he took off.

Sighted Lighthouse But when hope was almost gone, the lighthouse on Greenly Island was sighted and a landing made. As the fliers stepped from their damaged plane, the Grenfell nurse said, they

FROST DAMAGES MACADAM ROADS

State Suffers More From Effects of Cold Than at Any Time Since 1920.

Damage to macadam roads in Adams county by the open winter has been extensive, and according to W. A. Van Duser, assistant chief engineer of the state highway department, greater disintegration among highways was found this spring than any time since 1920.

"What is true of Pennsylvania is also true of the neighboring states," he said. "Frost action is responsible for this condition and experience has shown that following a mild winter of many light snows the roads are broken up considerably more than after one of long lying snow."

Mr. Van Duser exonerated the engineers who constructed the roads from all blame for their break-up and stated that it was not fair to contrast the life of a well-constructed building with an equally well-built road because roads were much more dependent on the soil on which they are built and upon the drainage system.

At the local maintenance office of the highway department it was stated that the bituminous constructed roads were less severely affected by the frosts than the oil-bound macadam, the latter type highway having a better base and being built up by a special process not used on the oil-bound highways.

It was stated at the highway office that most of the damage to Adams county roads caused by the winter's freezes and thaws has already been repaired by the maintenance forces.

STOCK REPORT

New York, April 18.—(AP)—Prices moved lower at the opening of the stock market today. Selling gained force as the first hour advanced. General Motors extending its loss to three points. The demand for larger margin requirements precipitated a flood of selling later which drove down many industrials and specialties from 2 to 4 points. General Electric, DuPont and Atlantic Refining were among the hardest hit.

RIVAL DEBATERS FIND THEY'RE ON SAME SIDE

Emory University Orators Come All The Way From Georgia To Discover They Have No Argument With Gettysburg College.

For once, two debating teams have agreed upon an issue and admitted it.

Arguments prepared by orators of Emory university, of Atlanta, Ga., and Gettysburg college, over the question of whether the United States should protect its foreign investments during war, were found to jibe as completely as two peas in a pod when the two teams got together for their forensic conflict at the Zion Lutheran church at Harrisburg Tuesday night.

Through some misunderstanding, both teams had prepared arguments on the affirmative side of the issue. A lopsided predicament indeed. Two affirmative teams, one having come several hundred miles to defeat the other, an eager audience; but no negative opposition.

The Gettysburg gentlemen of words, being the hosts for all practical purposes, withdrew their affirmative argument and took up an impromptu debate on the negative side. In view of the freakish circumstances, the judges, Dr. H. F. Shenk, state archivist; Dr. Arthur E. Brown, headmaster at Harrisburg academy, and William H. Earnest, State Senator, did not make a decision.

Ralph Tabor and Stewart W. Herman, Jr., were members of the Gettysburg team. The Emory duo was composed of Reginald W. McDuffee and Wallace M. Alston.

MUSICAL FARCE GETS APPROVAL OF BIG AUDIENCE

"Oh Boy" Apparently Enjoyed More Than Recent Musical Revues; Mrs. Malone Stars.

The likable musical farce, "Oh Boy," given by local players under the auspices of the American Legion at the Majestic Theatre Tuesday night, brought exclamations of "Oh Boy" from the fair sized audience that witnessed it. The show, something different from the usual run of home talent musical productions, had a plot, something which none of the others could boast of, and then too the Tuesday night show had some lines which were clever and the same can be said for the music.

Jean Field Malone, as the vivacious actress, strutted to popularity which she rightly deserved. Mrs. Malone has appeared in many other local productions but never before in a musical show and it was evident from the ovations her numbers received that the audience would be satisfied if she would appear in as many future shows as would be permitted before her departure for Honolulu in July.

C. Richard Wolff, playing opposite her, is also to be classed as "new talent," for in his role as bon vivant and champion sportsman his audience was in accord in giving him appreciative applause and acclaim. G. N. Waters, another newcomer to Gettysburg audiences, as the butler, shared honors with Fred Pfeiffer, the comical, in the comedy roles and their

READING BUS LINE TO CARLISLE WILL START ON JUNE 1

Railway Company To Run Supplementary Service To Cumberland County Town.

Inauguration of motor bus transportation service between Gettysburg and Carlisle, supplemental to the steam facilities of the Reading company, will take place June 1, according to announcement today by the Reading transportation company, a subsidiary of the railroad.

Before the Gettysburg-Carlisle service opens, the company will put in operation busses on three other routes on April 29. These routes include Jenkintown to New Hope, Lansdale to Bally and Milton to West Milton. Beginning June 1, the company will also put on busses between Carlisle and Shippensburg and between Pottsville and Shenandoah.

To increase frequency The leading company also has pending before the state public service commission applications for bus service between Langhorne and Doylestown, Jenkintown and Feasterville, Glenside and Pennlyn, Glenside and Chalfont and Pottsville and Lykens.

"In order to afford greater frequency of service and to prevent interference with the travel habits of patrons in our territory where middle-of-the-day and night traffic does not warrant extensive steam train service, bus service will be inaugurated," the company's statement reads.

No schedule for the new bus service between here and Carlisle has been received at the local offices of the Reading company, and no announcement has been made of what changes will be made to the present steam service. The schedule will be announced in connection with the spring timetables, effective April 29.

Leave From Station The busses will leave from and stop at the local passenger station of the Reading. A special type of motorcoach has been designed for the bus service. The motorcoaches will seat 29 passengers, and space will be provided for the handling of a limited amount of baggage.

The motorcoach schedules of all of the routes have been planned to afford close connection with steam train service at junction points. In the one direction motorcoaches will arrive a few minutes before train time, and in the other, motorcoaches will leave promptly after passengers have transferred from train to motorcoach.

One-way and round-trip fares will be approximately the same as charged on the railroad, and one-day and round-trip railroad tickets will be accepted interchangeably on trains or motorcoaches between common points.

Farmers Worried As To Locust To Appear During May

Harrisburg, April 18.—The seventeen-year locust are due to appear this year in the counties along the Maryland state line, and the Department of Agriculture is being flooded by inquiries from Adams and neighboring counties regarding the extent of damage which may be expected.

"These locusts are not foliage eaters," entomologists of the department explain. "Consequently the damage will be entirely different than the damage caused by the Japanese beetle."

"The food of the locusts is secured by sucking juice from living plant tissue, but even this does no particular harm to the plants. The real damage results when the female locusts cut slits in the tender bark of twigs into which they deposit their eggs. When these eggs hatch, the larvae cause further splitting of the bark which greatly weakens the twig. Decay often starts and the heavy winds of summer with the additional growth of twigs soon cause the small limbs to break down."

The locusts are expected to make their appearance during the latter part of May, and will likely be most abundant during June and July. They usually are most common in or near wooded areas.

At Grunberg in Germany, in the same parallel of latitude as Newfoundland, are the most northern vineyards in the world.

CONCIERGE FAST DISAPPEARING

Famous French Institution Soon Will Be Dispensed With Figures Show.

Paris.—(AP)—Thousands of Parisians who have long grumbled at that famous French institution, the concierge, pretend to be delighted over the news that, one by one, the concierges are disappearing. More than 100 apartment houses dispensed with them during 1927, according to figures given out by the prefecture of police.

The concierge is more or less like an American janitor, but has one duty which a janitor hasn't. That is, to let you in when you stay out late at night. But if you ask most Parisian tenants, they will give the concierge the mean reputation of always opening the door begrudgingly and expecting a tip therefor, this being additional to an annual honorarium. He—or often she—is also supposed to keep the stairways in a fairly presentable condition, receive packages and mail for you and direct callers to your apartment. It is a Parisian joke that they seldom do these things.

In any case, dwellers in those apartment houses where a maid has been substituted for the concierge and a key for the late night door opening bail the change. On the other hand, the 12,000 concierges of Paris have formed an association to defend their interests and oppose the spread of the key habit.

Mr. and Mrs. Hilbert lived at Hanover for a number of years and later removed to Lincoln Highway West at the Five Mile House. They had resided at that address for only several days.

Besides the parents the following brothers and sisters survive: Mrs. Carrie Black, West York; Alvin S. Hilbert, a student at Gettysburg college; Sadie A. Hilbert, Clarence E. Hilbert, Charles H. Hilbert, Jr., and Melvin L. Hilbert, all at home.

Funeral services at the funeral home of A. F. Koller at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon. Further services at the Stoverstown church, the Rev. Fred S. Geesey officiating. Interment in the cemetery adjoining the church.

DEATH TOLL IN MOSCOW IS 21

Moscow, April 18.—(AP)—Twenty-one deaths, 15 of them from vodka, were reported in Moscow over the Easter celebration. Six of the dead were killed by violence or accident while many persons were wounded by pistols and knives in drunken brawls. More than 1500 arrests were made.

Muscovites consumed about 4,500,000 bottles of vodka, 2,000,000 bottles of wine and 38,000,000 eggs during the holidays. On the first day ambulances were unable to cope with the calls.

With brains fogged by vodka men fell under automobiles, buses and trams, while others even drank kerosene and fought with fists, knives and other weapons at parties.

TESTIFIES FALL CARRIED OUT LEASE

Washington, April 18.—(AP)—Testimony that Albert B. Fall carried on all negotiations for the actual leasing of Teapot Dome to Harry F. Sinclair and that Secretary Denby, of the navy, never consulted Fall was given today by Capt. J. K. Robison, retired naval officer, at the conspiracy trial of the oil man.

Severely cross examined by the government prosecutor the former chief of the navy bureau of engineering today could not point out changes he had said Denby had made in the lease and he declared the navy secretary had never conferred with either Fall or Sinclair regarding it.

BANDITS HOLDUP BUS PASSENGERS

Carstadt, N. J., April 18.—(AP)—Taking command of a New York-Paterson bus early today, four men diverted the vehicle into a side street where they obtained 200 from the driver and jewelry and cash from 20 passengers. They escaped in a waiting automobile.

The bandits boarded the bus in New York and drew their guns when the vehicle was passing through this town. They ordered the passengers from their seats, lined them up outside and took even their eyeglasses.

Language Of Lights Tells Story Of Traffic Tunnel's Operation

New York, April 18.—(AP)—A task that even Argus with his hundred eyes would have found impossible has been made easy for one man, thanks to the science of modern electrical engineering.

The job is that of supervising the operation of the Holland Tunnel, the new double tube that conducts vehicular traffic under the Hudson between New York and New Jersey. The man is the control supervisor who, seated in a little room atop the administration building on the New York side, reads on three ingenious switchboards the story of what is happening in the white-tiled tunnel.

Behind the walls of this underwater thoroughfare are 30 miles of electric circuits connected with carbon monoxide recorders, traffic signals, fire alarms, the ventilating system and other protective devices. These circuits, the nerves of the tunnel, carry their messages to the switchboards which translate into terms intelligible to the supervisor the tales borne by the busy wires.

So intricate is this invisible messenger service that the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company, which built the boards, had to invent several new devices that serve as electrical watchmen safeguarding the motorist who drives through the tube.

Ventilation was perhaps the biggest problem that faced the engineers. The carbon monoxide released by the stream of cars that could be accommodated in the tubes was the chief bogey, but they overcame this hazard by installing a device that automatically records the amount of this deadly gas present in any of the fourteen sections of the tunnel at any time.

A series of delicate meters set on one of the three control boards records a continuous graph of the purity of the air in each of the ventilation divisions. Chemical analyses of samples of the atmosphere constantly are being made in the big tube and the results are traced on the meters. When the concentration reaches a predetermined maximum, a buzzer on the board rings and the operator knows that a certain section of the tunnel needs more air. He then turns a key on the supervisory board, thus speeding up a ventilating fan or putting additional fans to work.

Hundreds of miniature lamps distributed over the 24-foot panel of the supervisory control board tell how each motor and fan in the distant tubes is functioning. Some are keeping watch on the power cables that feed the electrical equipment of the tunnel. Others reveal whether the ventilating system is working properly, whether the water pumps are doing their assigned tasks and whether a faraway switch is open or closed.

Traffic control also is recorded by lights. Each little red, green or white bulb on the third board in the control room is a counterpart of a "Stop," "Go," or "Single File to the Right" signal in the tube, and the supervisor at his desk can tell at a glance whether the line of automobiles below the river is moving smoothly, or whether a tie-up has occurred, making possible one-man control of whatever situation may arise.

Warns of Damage to Game, Birds by Needless Fires

Harrisburg, April 18.—Needless burning of wood lots and fields, especially during the spring months, is a serious menace to small game and valuable birds, John B. Truman, executive secretary of the Board of Game Commissioners, said recently.

Although small game is not always killed directly by such fires, destruction of their food and natural cover cause them to starve or leave the section entirely, Truman asserted. Predatory birds, knowing of the terror with which all earth-bound animals flee from a fire, always collect in the vicinity of a blaze and the frightened creatures fall easy prey to them.

Nests of rabbits and ground nesting birds which lay their eggs early in the spring are destroyed by such fires, Truman added. Woodcock which nest very early, are driven permanently from their haunts or are killed while on their nests since they are loath to leave their eggs.

Truman suggested that fields not be cultivated during the year be allowed to retain their natural growth. It is believed that allowing brush to stand and attracting birds to good cover will permit them to control the wood snakes.

Another danger stressed in needless burning of fields and wood lots was the large number of times such blazes get beyond control and destroy thousands of acres of valuable timber.

Providing a home for Pennsylvania's game birds and animals, Truman believes, is the primary object of all propagation work. The existence of the bob white depends definitely upon the saving of shelters along the edges of wood lots and in the fields, it was said. Pheasants and rabbits also depend upon such cover to rear their young.

"If you want Pennsylvania to retain her title of a 'Hunters' Paradise,' help to provide good cover for the animals and birds that furnish sport to so many thousands," Truman said in closing his plea for cooperation.

7 Children Burned To Death In 2 Fires

Sisterville, W. Va., April 18.—(AP)—Four children were burned to death last night when fire destroyed their home at McElroy Creek, 15 miles from here. The dead, all children of Mr. and Mrs. Benton Tennant, were from three to ten years of age. Two older boys escaped death, but were burned.

The children were trapped in their bed rooms. The parents were down stairs when the fire broke out. Hearing screams they rushed to the second floor, but were driven by the flames.

Birger To Hang Tomorrow Morning

Benton, Ill., April 18.—(AP)—Charles Birger, notorious Southern Illinois gang leader, was found sane here yesterday by a jury which deliberated only ten minutes. He had pleaded insanity in an attempt to escape the gallows.

Birger's attorneys called only one witness to the stand in the hearing in Circuit Court. State's Attorney Roy C. Martin called a number of deputy sheriffs and one doctor in his efforts to prove the gang leader sane.

Judge Charles Miller announced Birger would be hanged Thursday. Sheriff James Pritchard set the hour for 10 a. m.

"This is the end of the road," said Robert E. Smith, Birger's chief attorney. "Nothing further will be done."

FORD OUTTALKED BY LLOYD GEORGE

British Premier Quizzes Auto Magnate on Conditions in U. S.

London, April 18.—(AP)—Henry Ford saw Lloyd George at his best yesterday. The war-time Premier, just back from the Easter holidays, was as keen as a whistle and so inquisitive about the United States that he almost forgot to eat his chop.

Mr. Ford accepted a luncheon invitation from Mr. Lloyd George and expected to hear much about British politics. He had already met the King and the Prince of Wales, but, of course, no foreigner ever thinks of talking politics with royalty, so the American automobile manufacturer thought an opportunity to learn all the ins and outs of English political events had at last arrived.

Mr. Ford had many questions he wanted answered, but Mr. Lloyd George started asking about the presidential campaign; what were Hoover's chances, and Dawes' and Al Smith's. Then he got Mr. Ford's views on prohibition, industry, export and agriculture. He asked about tractors and inquired about rubber, Wall Street, Dearborn, Detroit, America's views on the League of Nations—in fact, just about everything under the American sun.

The first thing Mr. Ford knew the luncheon was concluded and Mr. Lloyd George rushed off to attend the opening of the House of Commons.

"My goodness!" exclaimed Mr. Ford afterward, "but that man can ask questions."

appearance on the stage was enough to set the house into peals of laughter. Both Mr. Waters and Mr. Pfeffer were suited to their parts and acted them to perfection.

Grace Ramer, Myers and Wimbirt Neely, playing the roles of the eloping couple, were charming in their interpretations and their appearance in the show was appreciated by their host of admirers. Louis Dougherty Bream, as one of the friends who just dropped in, scored in her song, "A Little Bit of Ribbon, A Little Bit of Lace."

Miss Jessica Weaver, as the tipsy Quaker aunt; Miss Mary Ramer, as the mother of the "girl," and W. G. Weaver, as her father and also Toodles, all of whom have appeared numerous times before Gettysburg audiences, were playing up to their high standard and were liked by the crowd. The mere appearance of Leonard Bryant, Owl and Nightingale comedian, was the signal for an outburst of laughter from the audience.

The chorus girls and boys, while not called upon for many dances none of which were intricate, lent a pleasing background to the action of the play.

The only adverse criticism to be given would concern the long waits, before the first curtain, between the acts and one or two slight mixups in "cues," but these were nothing to worry or fret over and the audience as a whole enjoyed the performance more than they have other home talent shows in recent years, if the comments to be heard today are to be taken as a good indication.

The members of the chorus were Miss Elizabeth Mumper, Miss Christine Eberhart, Miss Frances Eberhart, Miss Margaret Tawney, Miss Peggy Waters, Miss Mildred Gilbert, Miss all exclaimed "Thank God!"

While these first authentic reports were coming in, preparations went forward for the Bremen's crew to continue to New York, leaving their plane behind them to be shipped later to Halifax for repairs.

The news that the Bremen's lighting system failed toward toward the end of its journey was wireless to the Canadian Press from Point Amour, the station which sent out the first word of the Bremen's arrival. The Baron was quoted as estimating that the plane flew 400 miles without any lights by which to read instruments, and to this he attributed the fact that the Bremen flew far to the north of its intended course.

At dawn of the second day, he said, a blizzard forced the plane dangerously low as it approached the Newfoundland coast and when the light on Greenly Island was seen it was at once decided to try a landing.

The Grenfell nurse was Miss Greta Ferris, who with other mission workers traveled 15 miles across the ice from the mainland for the first interview with the fliers.

She said that although the aviators had been through a terrible ordeal in the air and the Baron had been near exhaustion and still felt the cold keenly, she and her companions were received cordially. The fliers signed their autographs and posed for pictures and when the women left the Baron kissed their hands with old world courtesy.

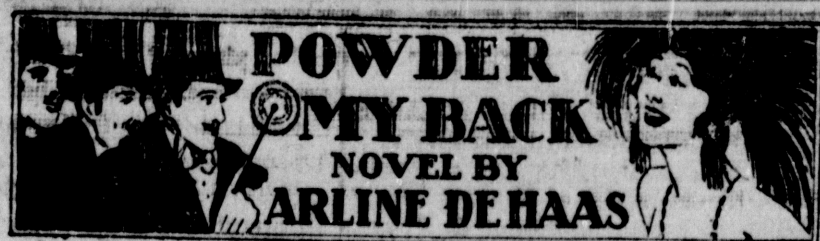

Miss Ferris said she learned that fog was encountered during almost all the 36 hours the Bremen was in the air and that when the Greenly Island for a ship, was sighted shortly before the plane was landed on the ice it was a fishing steamer caught in the Details of Landing

Halifax, N. S., April 18.—(Canadian Press).—Details of the perilous ending of the hop of the German monoplane Bremen from Ireland to Greenly Bay were disclosed in a message received at the government wireless office today from Point Amour, nearest wireless station to Greenly Island.

The crew of the Bremen want up 2,000 feet in an unsuccessful attempt to fly above the heavy fog they encountered off the New Foundland coast. Trying the other alternative, they descended to within fifty feet of the water, which was being whipped into high waves by a storm.

Again ascending, the fliers soon found themselves over a strange wooded country, then over a river, soon a high mountain loomed ahead and the Bremen "went over the top." A lighthouse, mistaken by the fliers for a ship, was sighted shortly before the plane was landed on the ice at Greenly Island.

"POWDER MY BACK," starring Irene Rich, is a Warner Bros. picture of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
Adele Dayton, famous musical comedy star playing in "Powder My Back," has numerous photographs made of titled men powdering her back, to be used for publicity purposes. One of these pictures appears in her home town paper in Brookton, Iowa. Mabel, her married sister, sees it, and is horribly shocked. She writes to Adele, inviting her to visit Brookton, suggesting that some purifying country air might do her good. Adele is amused and accepts. On the way to Brookton a young man boards the train and, recognizing the actress from her photographs, introduces himself as Harry Stark, a friend of her sister's family.

"You said that you were with the Brookton National Bank," Adele encouraged the conversation. "Isn't Geo—I mean Mr. Robertson president of the bank now?" Adele caught herself before she actually said George Robertson, because that was the way she remembered the Robertson boy who had escorted her to parties when she was a child, and had seemed to continue escorting her until she had left her home town and George behind her. Now she just happened to remember that George had followed his father into the business.

"Why, you don't mean to tell me you know that old fossil," Harry stared in amazement at the actress. "He's in Chicago on business. But I say, how ever did you happen to know him?"

"Perhaps you'll tell me about some of your ideas."

Harry's answer caused Adele to stare at the young man, and then glance away out the window for a second. For he had given her a tremendous start. "That old fossil," this boy had called George Robertson, and yet Adele had gone to school with him. Suddenly the thought of her age crept sickeningly over her. Why, she was as old as Robertson—and yet this boy must be twenty-five, anyhow, and he was speaking of her school chum as a fossil! For a moment she was stunned. Perhaps it might be the callousness of youth; the duty that it inflicted on age. But she wasn't old, Adele told herself. She wasn't—she bit her lip, and then laughed—not genuinely, but her stage training stood her in good stead, and she laughed.

"Oh, I know so many people out here—by name mainly. You see, when we all grew up here, everybody's family knew every other body's family, but—"

But Harry was entirely too fascinated by the woman beside him to think much of what she was saying, and her slight hesitancy, especially when broken by that particular smile, held him in a magic of its own. Besides, Harry was not particularly anxious to talk business and family. As Adele had remarked to herself when she noticed him on the platform.

"Really, I don't want to talk families and business to you, though," Harry interrupted her. "There's plenty of that in Brookton, and it's seldom that one has a chance to talk about anything else. Personally, I hate business—but I can see nothing else to do here. What I really want to do is to go to New York. I want to write plays."

"You want to write plays?" Adele encouraged him. "Have you ever tried it?" This with all the sophistication and bitter knowledge of one who has been "through the mill."

"Of course I've tried," Harry explained. "And I think that if I could really get to New York I might be able to accomplish something in that line."

"Why?" Adele asked him. "Well—I don't just know. I have ideas, and certainly I don't know as most of them are good."

Who are producing the stuff now." Adele regarded the young man beside her with a sort of patronizing, parental interest. She had heard such stories many a time and again. She knew that sad cry of all youth—get to New York to get into the theatrical game. And how many had gone—and lost all their illusions, and refused to return to the old homestead and try business, but went on and on, doing back work of any kind; and others who had made the grade, as she had. But in thinking of these things she began to notice the personality of the young man beside her. His sensitive mouth showed that he might be able to do fine things, if he would stick to them. His slender, finely chiseled nose and high forehead set off his gleaming brown eyes that worked a spell when you looked into them. Adele sighed.

"So you want to go to New York to write plays?" she asked again. "How much have you done so far?" "Well, of course I haven't had much time, but I've really worked. I've got plenty of rejected manuscripts, if that's what you mean."

He looked at Adele, pleading for sympathy. "Oh, please don't think I'm just an idle who has an idea he wants to do something, and that because he's so much better than everyone else, or the managers don't give a newcomer a chance, he can't get a newcoming through. I'm not that way."

"No, I don't think you are," Adele admitted, although she had expected to hear once more that very story. Evidently this young man was sincere.

"But I do think that if I got right into the center of the game, and found my market, and knew just what was happening every minute—why, do you know we never get a decent play here. Our only opportunity is Chicago, actually. I mean, to really see anything. And what are you going to do if you can't follow the present trend of plays?"

"You've never been around Broadway, then?" Adele questioned. "You don't know anything about the struggle that people go through before they actually land. You don't know the hard grinding work—"

"But I'm not afraid of work," Harry assured her. "I want to work—but I want to get into the environment that I need. I'd like to do something really good. Of course, I'll admit that a lot of people have got started from a small town—but don't they always end up on Broadway—I mean, after they've landed their first play. And, actually, how many people who are not on Broadway really do land plays?"

"You're right," Adele admitted. "If you want to sell a certain brand of goods, you have to go to the market where those goods are sold." Adele was thinking of her own life and her struggles. Somehow, she felt that she wanted almost to shield this boy and protect him from some of the hardships that she herself had known when she made her first early struggles.

"Perhaps you'll tell me about some of your 'ideas,'" Adele suggested. "No one can promise help, but of course, if I can offer any suggestions, I'd be glad to do that."

"Rather than tell you about them, I'd much sooner bring some of the stuff I have written and go over it with you."

"That probably would be better." For the first time in a long time Adele did not stifle a yawn when someone suggested reading a manuscript. When she had been more glibly she had taken many youngsters in the game and tried to help them out. But, somehow, they had all failed to present anything plausible, let alone possible, and later she had come to feel that the best thing to do was to let them go it alone, as she had done, and then, if they had the qualities necessary, they would make something of themselves. She helped anyone she could who came to her, but she believed in a standard of self-reliance. But now she leaned forward eagerly—even earnestly—to listen to this man and to hear what he had in mind.

"I don't suppose, after all," Harry was pursuing his argument, "that there is anything so actually new along the lines of plot, but I think that there are some new ways of presenting ideas. For instance, literature had taken a certain trend—it has come to be not so much a recital of people's actions, but what is going on inside their heads—the mental conversations, so to speak. And it's much more interesting. Now, a play, with a set of characters developed along that line—O, it's not absolutely new, I have ideas, and certainly I don't know as most of them are good."

MY FRIEND'S FRIEND

I have a friend who has a friend,
A man I've never seen;
Unto his courage there's no end,
His hands are always clean;
He has no weakness to defend,
No vicious traits or mean.

Of him I've never heard it told
That he is false or base,
A cunning trickster seeking gold,
A fawner, seeking place;
Man's common failings, centuries old,
On him have left no trace.

And should I never meet him here
This only could I say,
That one there is who holds him dear
And speaks his praise today;
Who sees his splendor shining clear
And hides his faults away.

Friend of my friend, your worth I know,
'Tis often told to me,
If you have faults they do not show
Or them he will not see.
Fame may be sweet to win, but oh,
Your friend's friend I would be.

"Well, I never," exclaimed Uncle Lucky, as he and his small bunny nephew hopped along a little ridge of dry land that rose above the wet swamp-land near the Old Duck Pond, "well, I never!"

"Why, what's the matter?" asked the bunny boy, curious to learn the reason for the old gentleman rabbit's sudden exclamation.

"Did you notice how suddenly the piping of the little frogs came to an end?" answered observant Uncle Lucky.

"Yes, but what of it?" enquired the little bunny.

"I stepped on a dry twig; it broke with a snap; the slightest careless sound will frighten these little piping frogs," explained the old gentleman rabbit.

"Wish they'd begin again," sighed the bunny boy. "I love to hear their shrill little voices."

"Do you?" all of a sudden enquired a voice. "I'll start up the chorus," and Mr. Blackbird perched himself on an alder branch and gave a short, sharp whistle. "There, do you hear them?"

Of course the little rabbits did, for one after another of the little frogs began to swell the chorus, and in a few minutes the little orchestra of the swamp was again in full swing.

"That's very kind of you," said Uncle Lucky, as Mr. Blackbird joined in the music.

"Don't mention it," he answered, swinging gaily on the slender branch, his red shoulder straps gleaming in the sunshine. "Don't thank me. I like to hear this spring music. Those tiny Hylas are a brave little bunch while the ice is still in the pond I've heard their little promise of spring-time. Yes, indeed, those tiny frogs are brave, hopeful little people."

"You're right, Mr. Blackbird," agreed dear Uncle Lucky. When, goodness me! All of a sudden Happy Blackbird's shrill cry of alarm sounded from the Sunny Meadow. Instantly the little peepers ceased their singing and Mr. Blackbird flew into the thicket. And the little rabbits? Well, they didn't linger out in the open. No, siree! They hopped into the bramble thicket and kept very quiet as Sharp Shin Hawk sailed by in quest of food.

"There, he's out of sight," in a few minutes cried Mr. Blackbird, and with a short, sharp whistle, very like the piping of these little frogs, he again set them all a singing in the swamp-land.

"Easiest thing in the world to set agoing," he chuckled. "All I have to do, as you've just seen, is to imitate their little trouble note. Did you ever get close enough to the water to see

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

THE HABIT OF THOUGHT

PEOPLE who know how to think are never alone.
Every object of life is an example for thought. Every book, every human being, every item in the newspaper or magazine. Every mistake. The mind has to have thought to keep it going. Just as the automobile has to have gas and oil.

The smoke coming out of a factory chimney tells the thinking man something human and everlasting. He sees homes in it, struggles, hopes, ambitions, sacrifices, and ideals.

Every tragedy and comedy of life are things for thought.
The habit of thought is the greatest habit anyone can form. A man is safe with a mind that has been trained to think. You don't have to worry about such a man or woman as a friend.

Every reader of a book should read it as a test of mind. That's one reason why books should be of the working part of one's life.

We play our little games by mustering, and then mastering, our thoughts aright.

Nothing is good or great but what thinking makes it so. You know a man or woman by taking his or her thoughts apart and classifying them. Leaders throw their thoughts away. Builders go out and gather them up from the byways, from the far corners of the earth. The thinker can stand on any street corner and gather up gold, as a miner may with his pick where he knows that gold is concealed.

Opportunities are everywhere. But the habit of thought must search them out.

Harry Sinclair's Future Lies with Them

Here are the men, shown on their way to luncheon, in whose hands lies the fate of Harry F. Sinclair, on trial in the District court in Washington for alleged conspiracy to defraud the government in the Teapot Dome lease.

Timely News Items Of Agricultural Extension Service

State College, April 18.—(AP)—Cumberland County Baby Beef club boys and girls are going to make a strong bid for championship honors at the 1928 State Farm Products Show in Harrisburg. Thirty members have been enrolled, County Agent P. L. Edinger, Carlisle, today informed the club office at the Pennsylvania State college here.

A committee, consisting of Elmer Brindle and Harry Markley, Mechanicsburg, has been chosen to buy calves for the club. If Shorthorn calves of good quality are available at less cost than Herefords or Aberdeens-Angus, these will be bought.

To economize in the purchase and transportation costs, the present plan calls for cooperation with the Dauphin County Baby Beef club, which has a membership enrollment of twenty-one. The combined enrollment of the two clubs will use one large carload of calves.

Lebanon and Perry county clubs, as well as the Cumberland and Dauphin groups, will have round-ups at the 1928 state show, where the state championship will be determined. Lebanon county has obtained calves already, forty-five Herefords, which are now on feed.

That the sash greenhouses recommended by the Pennsylvania State college vegetable gardening extension specialists are economically good investments is the opinion of Harry W. Siegel, vegetable grower of Berks county.

"The sash greenhouse can be erected for about seventy-five cents a square foot of floor space and is comparatively inexpensive," he told members of the Berks County Agricultural Extension association at their annual meeting. "This price can be reduced if one has some of the material on hand."

"The cost of building my sash house was $99.36, itemized as follows: Lumber, $49.11; millwork, 80 cents; roofing paper, $3; glass, $2; putty, $1.50; hardware, $1.80; sash, $36; paint, $2.10; and stovepipe, $3.05. The value of the material that I had on hand amounted to about thirty dollars and included a door and an old heater."

Trinity Lutheran Church History is Interesting Reading

Arendtsville Lutherans Worshipped in Two Other Buildings Before Present Structure Was Erected in 1882. During Pastorate Of The Rev. D. M. Blackwelder; Dr. D. T. Koser Is Only Former Pastor Now Living.

With the dedicatory exercises at the Trinity Lutheran church at Arendtsville during the week attracting persons from many sections of the upper end of Adams county a short history as taken from the voluminous Centennial History of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of West Pennsylvania, 1825-1925, edited by Dr. Adam Stump and Dr. Henry Anstadt, is printed herewith.

The section devoted to this church follows: "The vicinity of Arendtsville was settled between 1736 and 1740 by Scotch-Irish Presbyterians and afterwards by Germans from York, Lancaster and other sections. The German settlers were, as a rule, members of the Lutheran and Reformed churches.

"The exact date of church organization at Arendtsville is not known, but likely occurred about 1780 or 1785." The following is from the pen of the Rev. A. J. Heller: "A lot of ground was conveyed, April 30, 1781, by Sophie Sentmire and Jacob Arendt to Frederick Stanour and Phillip Hartzell, trustees of the Lutheran and Reformed congregation, on which a church was erected in 1787. This lot was situated in Cumberland township, York county, on the waters of the Great Conewago, now the central part of the town. The church was a log building, weatherboarded. It was two stories, having galleries on three sides. The pulpit was in the shape of a barrel, and set against the wall. The altar was enclosed by a chancel railing.

New Church In 1881 "It stood in the northeast corner of the square, opposite the present church building. A school and sexton house then stood where the present church stands. In 1881 the foundation of the new church was dug on the site of the old school and sexton house, the cornerstone being laid May 15, and the church dedicated on Christmas day of the same year. "The Reformed and Lutheran congregations built this church jointly and called it Zion. This Zion church was 55 by 42 feet in dimensions and was built of brick. It was two stories with galleries on three sides. Its pulpit was without sounding board and was modern in style. The altar was without a chancel railing, and every part of the interior is destitute of all ornaments, and was made in the plainest possible manner.

"No steeple or cupola indicated to the stranger the sacredness of the edifice and no church bell here ever called together devout worshippers. "The following ministers have served the Lutheran congregations in both church buildings, viz: the Rev. Mr. Metzger, 1816; the Rev. Heinley and John Herbst, 1819; the Rev. Charles Weyle, 1830; the Rev. Frederick Ruthrauff, 1832; the Rev. Benjamin Keller, 1836; the Rev. A. R. Height, 1857 from spring to fall; the Rev. George Roth, 1857; the Rev. S. J. Bell, 1858; the Rev. J. K. Miller, 1860; the Rev. Michael Snyder, 1866; the Rev. H. F. Long, 1873, and the Rev. D. M. Blackwelder, 1877. The years given indicate the beginnings of the pastorate.

Congregations Separate "For many years, up to June 24, 1873, both congregations jointly used the same record. The first recorded communion was held by the Lutherans May 9, 1790. Through its whole past history of about 100 years, the Lutheran congregation has been blessed with a good share of prosperity. "Inasmuch as Zion church needed repairs, and as there was no disposition to repair it as a union church, and inasmuch as the doctrine was held and taught and the usages practiced and the two denominations had through the introduction of Nevinism and semi-Romanism made them so diverse in sentiment and in feeling; therefore, a prevailing desire had been felt and expressed by the Lutherans to have their own house of worship.

"This desire took shape during the years 1880 and 1881 and resulted in a successful effort to build a new church suitable to meet the growing necessities. In the early spring of 1881 the Lutheran congregation sold out its half interest in all the union church property to the Reformed congregation for $1100 and began to build Trinity Lutheran church of Arendtsville, adjoining the parsonage on High street on a site secured from Elias Spangler, for $150.

Members Build Church "In the erection of the new Lutheran church, Daniel Arendt, Solomon Hartman, Elias Spangler and Isaac Byers composed the subscription soliciting committee; while Peter Taylor, Henry Beamer, John F. Bush, John Frank Hartman and Michael composed the building committee. The contracting mechanics were all from the Lutheran congregation and were George W. Lady, mason; Amos H. Lady, carpenter; John Jacobs, plasterer, and George Grant, painter. The great mass of the membership have money, labor and material liberally.

"The first congregational meeting of the new church was held in Zion church February 6, 1881.

"The ground foundation was broken May 14, 1881.

"The sermon was preached in Zion church by the Rev. M. J. Alleman. The cornerstone was laid by the pastor, the Rev. D. M. Blackwelder.

"The first sermon was preached by the pastor in the lecture room on Sunday, June 11, 1882.

"The building was finished by the committee September 27, 1882.

President Once Crashed Gate To Reception

Paris.—(AP)—Poor young students who "crash the gates" at the Elysee palace presidential receptions get a lot of sympathy from President Gaston Doumergue. He remembers when he did the same thing.

"I remember my first evening here," he told some guests recently. "It was during the presidency of Jules Grevy. I was a student then. I had to rent my dress suit and I came with a friend's invitation, but I was allowed to come in, nevertheless."

Some of the people who borrow invitations, however, get turned away. Recently a smart young man came with the card of a well-known senator, old enough to be his grandfather. He was shown out. Even the prefect of the Seine department, Monsieur Boujou, was stopped because he forgot his invitation. He had to prove his identity.

On one point, the Elysee is inflexible. Men must wear full dress. Dinner jackets don't go with the president of the republic.

DESIGN ON SPREAD IS CALLED WRONG

Crocheted Covering Made By Mrs. Coolidge Does Not Conform With Code.

New York (AP)—Some of the designs in the bedspread which Mrs. Coolidge crocheted for the Abraham Lincoln bedspread in the White House have been called incorrect by the national flag code committee.

The spread is divided into three sections, the first of which displays the Liberty Bell, the second the seal of the United States and the third the olive branch. The border is composed of a series of shields and olive branches.

"The eagle of the great seal of the United States always looks to the right, 'to victory and honor,'" Gridley Adams, chairman of the flag code committee, explains. "In his right talon he holds an olive branch, the offer of peace. In his left talon he carries thirteen arrows, the 'big stick'."

"Mrs. Coolidge's eagle is wrong in several respects. In the first place the eagle is holding the arrows—and only two—in his right talon, and the olive branch in the left. The tape through the eagle's mouth, bearing the motto of the United States, is missing, as are also the 13 feathers in his tail. In addition the spread contains some 40 or more shields, not one of which is correct."

"This shield is taken from the great seal, which is the official signature of the United States and is shown in every school dictionary. The correct shield has only six red stripes and seven white ones, just the reverse of the number in the flag, while there are no stars in the blue. Mrs. Coolidge's shields have either five, seven or nine red stripes."

ARTIST IS FRIEND OF ARAB TRIBES

Miss Eda Sterchi, American, Was For Three Years Resident of Tunis Painting Pictures.

Tunis (AP)—An American woman, frail in appearance and barely five feet in stature, is a recognized art authority here on Arabians and desert subjects of Northern Africa.

Miss Eda Sterchi, for three years a resident of Tunis, expects to return to her home near Chicago soon with more than a score of canvases which she has been requested to exhibit in New York and Chicago.

France has decorated her with the violet rosette of the Academy for her portrayals of Arabians and African scenes. She is also an officer of the Nichan Iftikhar, Tunisian equivalent of the French Legion of Honor.

Miss Sterchi is an admirer of the Arabian people. They are not the bad men that they are supposed to be, she says, but are instead a gentle, courageous people whose upper classes live in a European manner and whose desert men are "splendid physical specimens with many excellent qualities."

She has several times been the guest of the Bey of Tunis in his summer home near Carthage. She has traveled alone over large portions of Morocco, Algeria and Tunis without fear or difficulty.

Miss Sterchi is a former student of the Chicago Art Institute.

Why not select Cement?

TODAY, everyone in the community has an influence in selecting the type of pavement to best withstand the wear and tear of heavy traffic. Of course, that type of pavement, concrete, has proven its superiority. Cement is the chief ingredient of all concrete—it should be carefully selected.

In this vicinity you'll find permanent roads, bridges, culverts, streets and roadways built with Security Portland Cement.
